

Canopy Consumption is a group project I did for a business class I took at the Columbus College of Art & Design. The idea of this project was to introduce artists into the business world by having us create a prototype small business. Our business idea was to help individuals become more self-sustaining through creating at-home gardens!

The first step is to grow the plants themselves, so our product was the DIY basil garden!

one of my partners created the logo and I polished and finalized the design to make it look more organic.

I also designed and assembled the boxes we used to package our DIY kits.
